Description

One sunny day, a hat seller sets out to sell his caps at the circus. He has a big stack of caps, all different colors and sizes. But as he walks along, a strong wind comes up and blows all of his caps away!

The hat seller chases after his caps, but the wind is too strong. The caps fly all over the place, landing in trees, on animals, and even on the heads of people.

The hat seller is very upset. He doesn't know how he will ever get all of his caps back.

But then, something wonderful happens. The animals and people who have found the caps start to return them to the hat seller.

One by one, the caps are returned, until the hat seller has them all back.

The hat seller is so happy to have all of his caps back. He thanks the animals and people who helped him, and then he goes back to the circus to sell his caps.

Caps for Sale is a delightful children's book with a catchy refrain that kids will love to repeat.

The illustrations are charming and whimsical, and they perfectly capture the excitement and chaos of the story.
