The Ice Age

The Ice Age was a period of time between 2.6 million and 11,700 years ago when the Earth's climate was much colder than it is today. During this time, glaciers covered much of the planet's surface and sea levels were much lower than they are today. The Ice Age had a profound impact on human evolution and migration. It forced our ancestors to adapt to new environments and to develop new technologies to survive.

The Coming of Agriculture

Around 10,000 years ago, the climate began to warm and the glaciers began to retreat. This led to a period of rapid population growth and the development of agriculture. The first farmers settled in the Middle East and began to cultivate crops such as wheat and barley. Agriculture allowed humans to settle down in one place and to build permanent communities.

Around 3,000 years ago, humans began to use bronze, an alloy of copper and tin. The Bronze Age was a time of great technological and cultural advance. The use of bronze tools and weapons allowed humans to clear forests, build cities, and create works of art. The Bronze Age also saw the development of writing and the first civilizations.

The Iron Age

Around 1,200 years ago, humans began to use iron, a stronger and more durable metal than bronze. The Iron Age was a time of further technological and cultural advance. The use of iron tools and weapons allowed humans to build larger and more complex structures and to create new forms of art.

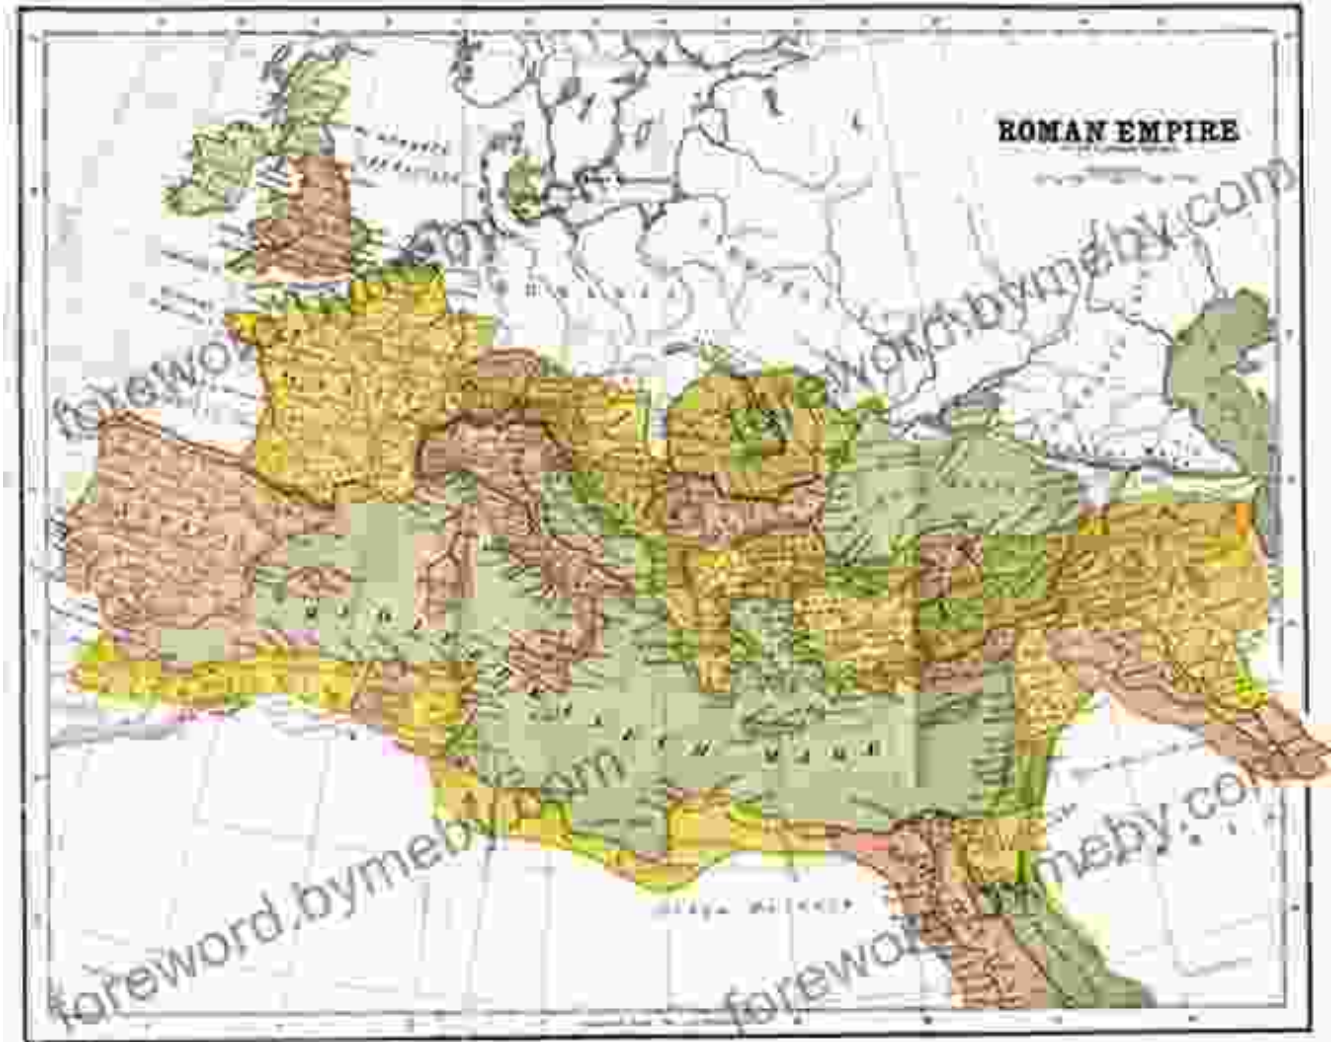

The Iron Age also saw the development of new political systems and the rise of empires.
