In the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, the police killings of George Floyd, Breonna Taylor, and countless others, and the nationwide protests that followed, it is more important than ever to understand the intersections of these four themes: pandemic, policing, protest, and possibility.

We Still Here is a collection of essays that explores these intersections. The essays are written by a diverse group of scholars, activists, and artists, and they offer a range of perspectives on the challenges and opportunities that these themes present.

The book is divided into four sections:

1. Pandemic: This section explores the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on our lives and communities. The essays in this section examine the ways in which the pandemic has exacerbated existing inequalities, and they offer insights into how we can build a more just and equitable world in the wake of the pandemic.
2. Policing: This section explores the role of policing in our society. The essays in this section examine the ways in which policing has been used to oppress and control marginalized communities, and they offer proposals for how we can create a more just and equitable system of public safety.
3. Protest: This section explores the role of protest in our democracy. The essays in this section examine the ways in which protest has been used to challenge injustice and to bring about social change, and they offer insights into how we can make our protests more effective.
4. Possibility: This section explores the possibility of a better future. The essays in this section offer visions of a more just and equitable world, and they provide inspiration for how we can work together to make these visions a reality.

We Still Here is a powerful and timely collection of essays that will challenge your thinking and inspire you to action. It is a must-read for anyone who is interested in the intersection of pandemic, policing, protest, and possibility.
